Students lend hands to Sunny Acres

In an impressive example of learn-by-doing, Cal Poly students are pitching in to clean up Dan De Vault's Sunny Acres property. The students in Roya Javadpour's industrial and manufacturing engineering class will spend the academic quarter on the project. They plan to clean up the De Vault property and also hope to bring some of the buildings up to code.

De Vault, who has operated a sober living shelter at his Los Osos Valley Road property for years, has run afoul of county officials numerous times for various code violations. Cal-Poly students are doing him, his clients and the entire community a huge service by improving the ranch — and that earns them top-of-the-class bouquets.
